After a long round of debates, the executives have decided that no message should be displayed when we fail to detect MS-DOS. The PR impact of showing a message would be great and would consume much of our time just dealing with the reaction from the press and others.

Rather than take out the detection, which we have tested with for some time now, we should just stub out the messages in each component. himem, smartdrive, setup, msd, and win.com. Any switches that were added should be removed.

Karlst, please forward to anyone I missed.

I want to thank everyone for their effort on this and putting up with the changes. It was a close call on what to do. We will have a readme item that explains we tested only on MS-DOS.

thanks
