

MS Office XP and StarOffice 5.2 Feature Comparison

Note: This comparison was based on StarOffice 5.2, and remains consistent for StarOffice 6.0 functionality, except where noted. Specifically, StarOffice 6.0, currently in Early Access, provides complete and fully documented XML file formats, unicode and Asian language support.

System Requirements

MS Office XP Professional full installation Windows 2000 now requires a whopping 410 MB free disk space. Users with Windows 95 systems or limited disk space will have to upgrade hardware for Office XP. StarOffice runs great on older hardware and requires only 168 MB RAM for a complete install, making it an easier choice for many.

Ease of Learning Features

Overall, because of the familiarity of MS Office products, users initially find Office XP easier to use than StarOffice. However, usability and customer research shows that simple tasks are easily performed and completed successfully by all StarOffice users. StarOffice users continue to gain comfort with more complex tasks after about a week of using StarOffice. Then after using StarOffice for a while, productivity is comparable and in some cases actually better to the integration of the StarOffice product.

StarOffice provides more comprehensive, informative and useful printed user documentation. XP's online help is reference based, providing concise how-to information to users questions. The MS Office Assistant Clippy is no longer the default. StarOffice online help provides thorough background information on the product and functionality.

Ease of Use

MS Office sometimes undeservably gets marks for ease of use simply because it is what most people have used in the past. However, usability studies show that once people become familiar with StarOffice they are equally productivity if not more so than when using MS Office.

The new Task Panes in Office XP mimic StarOffice's Stylist, Beamer, and Gallery available since StarOffice 4.0 and earlier. The Task Panes take up valuable real estate, and even add steps to some simple processes such as starting a new document. StarOffice provides much better context menus than Office XP, giving users quick access to functionality relevant to the task at hand. StarOffice utilizes the concept "everything in one place" so all tools to perform a task are grouped together.

Word Processing

Word 2002 and StarOffice 5.2 offer very similar word processing functionality. StarOffice provides much better performance with long documents. The new task panes in Word 2002, again mimic StarOffice stylist, but add the actual formatting to the window. Document collaboration, with the MS Share Point product, allows for copies of files to be reviewed by up to 10 people. StarOffice provides the required document review and collaboration functionality required by most users.

Localization

MS provides 30 localized versions and communicates a strong commitment to the worldwide market. Hands-down, MS is a much stronger presence in the worldwide office productivity suite market, with over 95% revenue market share. StarOffice continues to gain momentum in the international market, with foreign government adoption in Germany, France, and Denmark to name a few. (Not to mention the United States DoD adoption.) The next release of StarOffice brings unicode and Asian languages support to the APAC market. Through OpenOffice.org, Sun provides the ability to localize the code for any market.

Note: the localizations listed below apply to MS Office 2000, as of the date of this document; MS has not updated their XP web pages to reflect localizations.
