Oracle welcomes the Court's August 7, 2012 Order, as it believes that much of the copyright and fair use commentary that occurred outside of the courtroom before and during the pendency and trial of this case was instigated by Google or its direct or indirect representatives.

Pursuant to the Court's Order, Oracle identifies the following authors, journalists, commentators, or bloggers who have reported or commented on any issues in this case and who have received money (other than normal subscription fees) from Oracle or its counsel during the pendency of this action:

Oracle has retained Florian Mueller, author of the blog FOSS Patents, www.fosspatents.com, as a consultant on competition-related matters, especially relating to standards-essential patents. Oracle notes that Mr. Mueller fully disclosed his relationship with Oracle in a blog posting dated April 18, 2012; that Oracle retained him after he had begun writing about this case; and that he was not retained to write about the case. Mr. Mueller is a frequent critic of Oracle and was a leading advocate against Oracle's acquisition of Sun Microsystems, Inc., which led to Oracle's ownership of Sun's Java IP portfolio. A copy of Mr. Mueller's disclosure is attached as Exhibit A at 5.

Certain Oracle employees may have blogged about issues relating to the case. See, e.g., https://blogs.oracle.com/hinkmond/ (blogging about Java ME). Oracle did not ask or approve any of its employees to write about the case and does not track employee bloggers.

In view of the Order's reference to treatise writers, out of an abundance of caution, Oracle notes that Stanford University Professor Paul Goldstein is Of Counsel to Morrison & Foerster and is the author of the treatise Goldstein on Copyright. Professor Goldstein has not commented on this lawsuit.

In contrast, Oracle notes that Google maintains a network of direct and indirect "influencers" to advance Google's intellectual property agenda. This network is extensive, including attorneys, lobbyists, trade associations, academics, and bloggers, and its focus extends beyond pure intellectual property issues to competition/antitrust issues. Oracle notes that Google's extensive network of influencers has been the subject of recent press coverage. See, e.g., Exhibits B and C. Oracle believes that Google brought this extensive network of influencers
