Case No. 3:10-cv-03561 WHA

GOOGLE'S RESPONSE TO THE COURT'S AUGUST 7, 2012 ORDER RE
DISCLOSURE OF FINANCIAL RELATIONSHIPS WITH COMMENTATORS ON ISSUES IN THIS CASE

23 Dept.: Courtroom 8, 19th Floor
24 Judge: Hon. William Alsup

On August 7, 2012, the Court issued an Order directing the parties and their counsel to file a statement “identifying all authors, journalists, commentators or bloggers who have reported or commented on any issues in this case and who have received money (other than normal subscription fees) from the party or its counsel during the pendency of this action.” Dkt. 1229.

STATEMENT

Neither Google nor its counsel has paid an author, journalist, commentator or blogger to report or comment on any issues in this case. And neither Google nor its counsel has been involved in any quid pro quo in exchange for coverage of or articles about the issues in this case.

As the Court has recognized, a large volume of material was written in traditional publications and on the Internet about the case. Given the rise of self-publishing, individual blogs, and other fora for coverage and opinion, it is possible that any number of individuals or organizations, including those with indirect or attenuated financial connections with the parties, might have expressed views regarding this case. Rather than flooding the Court with long lists of such individuals or organizations who might have written something about the case, Google outlines below several general categories of individuals and organizations and requests the Court's further guidance as to whether it would be useful for Google to provide more details or attempt to compile a more comprehensive list. Google does not believe that individuals or organizations within these categories were intended to be encompassed within the scope of the Court's Order but Google brings them to the Court's attention out of an abundance of caution. Neither Google nor its counsel has paid any individuals or organizations within these categories to report or comment on any issues in this case.

A. Universities and other non-profit entities

For many years, Google has engaged in philanthropy in numerous areas including education and public interest issues. Accordingly, both before and after this litigation started, Google has openly and publicly donated money on a regular basis to a number of universities (see, e.g., http://research.google.com/university/relations/focused_research_awards.html, attached hereto as Ex. A), and to non-profit organizations (see, e.g., 1 http://www.google.com/publicpolicy/transparency.html, attached hereto as Ex. B).

2 At least some of those universities and entities have representatives who have elected to 3 comment or opine on the issues in this litigation, even though Google did not pay any of those 4 representatives to provide that commentary. Google began supporting and donating money to 5 these organizations long before this case began, and none of those periodic donations was 6 payment for commentary by representatives of those organizations on issues in this case. It
 7 would be extraordinarily difficult and perhaps impossible for Google to identify all individuals 8 who have commented on the issues in this case and who are also affiliated with a university or 9 non-profit organization to which Google has donated money.

10 B. Organizations to which Google belongs or has made contributions

11 For many years, Google has been a member of, or contributed to, numerous organizations, 12 including political organizations and trade associations. Google has openly and publicly 13 published for several years a list of such organizations on its U.S. Public Policy Transparency 14 page (available at http://www.google.com/publicpolicy/transparency.html, and attached hereto as 15 Ex. B). Google has not paid any of these organizations to comment on the issues in this case.
 16 This case, however, attracted significant media and industry attention and Google is aware that 17 representatives of some of these organizations have elected to comment on the case. It would be 18 extraordinarily difficult and perhaps impossible for Google to identify all individuals who have 19 commented on the issues in the case and who are also affiliated with one of these organizations.

20 C. Individuals who participate in Google's advertising programs and who also have 21 elected to comment on the case

22 Google derives revenue from its advertising programs, which benefit millions of 23 advertisers, publishers and owners of individual websites. For example, under Google's AdSense 24 program, Google pays publishers for ads displayed on their websites. It would be extraordinarily 25 difficult and perhaps impossible for Google to identify individuals who received money from 26 Google as part of the normal operations of Google's advertising programs and who have also 27 commented on the issues in this case.

1 D. Google employees, vendors or contractors who may have commented on the case

2 Google employs tens of thousands of people and also hires many vendors (including 3 outside counsel in this case) and independent contractors. Aside from Google employee or 4 vendor statements expressly attributed to Google (such as Google public relations personnel 5 responding to press queries about the lawsuit), these individuals were paid for other services
6 performed, and were not paid to comment on the issues in this case. It would be extraordinarily 7 difficult and perhaps impossible for Google to identify any and all such individuals who also 8 happened to comment upon the instant lawsuit.

9 E. Expert consultants

10 Google retained expert consultants to opine on matters relevant to this litigation, both on a 11 testifying and non-testifying basis. Google did not retain or pay any of these individuals to 12 provide public commentary on the issues in this case beyond the testimony and opinions they 13 rendered in this matter. Accordingly, Google does not understand these individuals to be within 14 the intended scope of the Court's Order.

15 F. Witnesses identified for trial

16 As the Court is aware, there were numerous witnesses identified for trial, some of whom 17 had affiliations with and received money from one or both of the parties to this case and who also 18 elected to publicly comment on the case. In light of the fact that the identities of these witnesses 19 are part of the record on appeal, Google does not understand these individuals to be within the 20 intended scope of the Court's Order.
